

Bees Teach How to Develop Focus

Are you as busy as a bee?

Have you ever learned a bee lesson?

Have you been involved with a coaching bee?

Author Daniel W. Evans

Bees Teach How to Develop Focus

A Busy Bee

Development of skills to maintain focus for leadership, business, ministry, or personal growth is desperately needed. Focus is important to maintaining a specific course intended to achieve a set goal. You can be as busy as a bee. However, if you do not remain focused you will not be making honey or money.

My Wife's Bee Pool

You need to read the 7/1/14 blog to find out about my wife's experience with bees and the lesson we learned.

A Bee Lesson Learned

How many times do we allow things around us to distract us? We may have no control over these things and they may not directly affect us. However, we allow them to distract us to the point of not recognizing opportunities and not achieving our goals. Have you heard the phrase, 'none of your business?' Many times we involve ourselves with things that we have no business involving ourselves. It only tends to distract us from focusing on the business at hand. The results are disappointments and failures.

A Coaching Bee

A coach asks questions to direct his client inward to where the answer may already rest. Ask yourself this question. Am I fully engaged in the process of focus to reach my goal? If you are not, you will lose time that can never be recovered, not to mention opportunities that may not return to you again.